ARTS, CULTURE AND MEDIA: HOW DO WE EVALUATE PUBLIC POLICY?

This new edition of the Conference on Cultural and Media Economics is dedicated to evaluating public policy on the arts, culture and media.

At various regional levels, public authorities intervene in the economic activities of the media, cultural and artistic sectors, whether it be:

- in the form of public expenditure; for example: a variety of subsidies and public aid initiatives supporting various facilities, events and players within the field;
- in the form of fiscal measures; for example: tax credit for phonographic, audiovisual, cinema or videogame businesses, and lower VAT rates for imported art, press, books and some live entertainment;

- in the form of regulatory provisions or industrial policies; for example: the provisions of the Heritage Code, television and radio broadcasting quotas, price-fixing for books and financial backing from the IFCIC;

- in the form of measures designed to support the job market; for example: Appendices VIII and X of the Agreement on Unemployment Insurance or a wide range of publicly-funded or supported arts training initiatives;

- finally, in the form of measures regarding the international exchange of goods and services; for example: support for export within cinema, books and music, or assistance with broadcasting live music or variety shows abroad;

The evaluation of public policy governing the arts, culture and media is vital in improving our understanding of public action, determining their usefulness and enabling changes to be made to their management. This is necessary not only in the context of recently imposed budgetary restraints on French local authorities and public players, but also within the context of newly developed methods of evaluating the causal impact of public policy.

The 7th Conference on Cultural and Media Economics provides researchers with the opportunity to present and discuss the latest results of the evaluation of the impact of subsidised festivals, the HADOPI Law, educational policy, support for the press and fiscal policy. Discussions will also focus on the range of different evaluation methods currently in use. There will also be retrospective analysis of public policy and an examination of local experiences.

1. This conference is supported by the French government and the Agence Nationale de la Recherche through its future investment programme under the aegis of LIEPP's 'laboratories for excellence' (ANR-11-LABX-0091, ANR-11-IDEX-0005-02).

CONFERENCE ON CULTURAL AND MEDIA ECONOMICS
